

FLOWERS BLOOM WHERE SCHOOL TOTS DIED

A section of the Memorial Garden on the spot where the children were burned to death.

As though their pure souls in the form of beautiful flowers hovered ever over the spot where 172 little lives were sacrificed, a peaceful, blooming garden marks the site of the grim Collinwood school tragedy near Cleveland, O.

A garden that was planted and is cared for by the children whose comrades and chums met death on that fateful day five years ago. That is the Collinwood Memorial. That is the form in which the memory of those innocent little ones will be kept
